UIP vice-president report on Czech Society of Phlebology 45th annual meeting

Sergio Giancesini

UIP vice-president for Northern Europe, Northern Africa, Near East

On November 8, the 45th annual meeting of the Czech Society of Phlebology was held online, under the presidency of prof. Jaroslav Strejcek.

The initiative was followed by 531 attendees from 28 countries.

The scientific program was, without doubt, of extreme quality, moving from anatomy to clinical data, from strategical to technical innovations in venous disease management.

A definitely high expertise was demonstrated by the panelists involved in the discussion. A pleasant final note of the president Strejcek pointed out the outstanding beauty of the country as well as the glorious history of the Society, active member of the UIP since 1973.

As UIP vice-president, I would like to deeply congratulate prof. Strejcek and all Czech Society of Phlebology for having also perfectly accomplished what I consider “the” mission of the UIP: “Strengthening the links between the venous organizations from all around the world, promoting evidence-based education and synergy for further advancement in the field”.

Indeed, the 45th annual meeting of the Czech Society of Phlebology was run in conjunction with the Latin America and Africa educational project LATAF, with a Czech delegation in the Lataf meeting and with a Latam delegation in the same Czech initiative.

On behalf of the UIP, I’d like to also thank the Czech Society of Phlebology for having welcomed myself, prof. Bottini and prof. Kabnick as delegates of the UIP Executive Committee.

Prof. Strejcek and the Czech Society of Phlebology have demonstrated to be able to transform the difficulty of this pandemic time in an opportunity to gather together at least virtually, fighting the social isolation, enhancing our common growth in the phlebology knowledge.

Until the next time in person in Prague, CONGRATULATIONS prof. Strejcek and all Czech Society of Phlebology.
